

Washington State Genealogical Society recognizes

Lois Price

of Richland, Washington

for outstanding efforts in the preservation of important records of genealogical value to Tri-City Genealogical Society and other researchers interested in the families of Washington State.

Lois Price distinguished herself in support of Tri-City Genealogical Society and other Washington State researchers through her unselfish efforts in preserving records and maintaining a significant collection of genealogical material in the Society's library. In the 1980s, she assumed the position of Librarian, a post she has held for many years. She headed a committee that undertook the first complete inventory of the Society's holdings, involving several thousand books and bound periodicals. She worked on projects creating an index of the 1910 census of Franklin County and cataloging old newspapers and other materials held by Franklin County Historical Society. She culls the materials donated by members to determine which are needed in the library and which can go to the annual fund-raising auction. She headed the effort to collate and bind research material received by the Society, and she helped obtain binding services for members who wish to preserve their own collections in a permanent fashion.

Given this 19th day of September in the year 2003, at the annual meeting of Washington State Genealogical Society at Richland, Washington.
